The Maxwell Farmhouse is a two and half story frame building constructed in 1894 by James H. Maxwell. The house has level siding. The house is three bays long by two deep with a two story rear wing. The house faces north with a double door central entrance. The door has sidelights and a transom. The facade has a single story porch supported by turned posts. The window sash is 2/2 with capped frames. There are paneled shutters on the first floor and lowered ones on the second. On the east gable end is a two story bay window. The patterned slate roof has a central peaked dormer with a brick chimney on each side of the dormer. The house has a stone foundation and basement.

The rear wing has a single store porch on the east side that has chamfered posts with brackets.

The interior has marble mantels in each room separated by a central stair hall. The doors have fluted frames with bulls eye stops. Most of the doors are four panel. In each room is an early iron hot water radiator.

To the south east of the house is a large frame barn of mortice and tenon construction with board and batten siding. The barn sits on a fieldstone foundation. The barn sits on a fieldstone foundation. There also is a frame corn crib with a wood shingle roof.
